EDITORIAL

We are pleased to bring to you the new look of INYI Journal. As you will see in this issue, we have begun to publish manuscripts from INYI members based on their research. Guidelines for manuscript submission are provided on page 3 and on our website. In this issue, Dr. Sara Podio-Guidugli and colleagues report on their study of Filipina women in Rome, entitled “Personal values in an acculturation context: a study of Filipina women in Rome.”

I had the pleasure of meeting with Dr. Podio-Guidugli when she was visiting York University last year. I am also delighted to welcome two of her colleagues as new members to INYI: Dr. Claudio Barbaranelli (Professor, University of Rome) and Dr. Joana Suta, whose work is featured in this issue of INYI Journal.

In a previous issue of INYI (Volume 2, Issue 2, 2011) I had written about the Programa Escolhas in Portugal. Headed by Pedro Caldo, this youth focused initiative has recently been funded for its 5th cycle. Congratulations to Mr. Caldo and his team for this impressive accomplishment.

Dr. Fernando Nunes (another INYI member) attended the event celebrating the Programa Escolhas initiation of its 5th cycle. He also presented in Portugal at an international discussion workshop on Portuguese Canadian identity (see Upcoming and Recent Events section).

My gratitude goes out to all INYI members for informing us of their recent publications/ presentations/ collaborations in the field of youth integration, and to Wajma Soroor for her assistance with the INYI Journal.

With our best wishes for the summer,

Nazilla Khanlou
